Animal owners and primary care veterinarians have a fresh resource tool with the relaunch of the VetSpecialists.com website

Developed by the American College of Veterinary Internal Medicine (ACVIM), VetSpecialists.com helps animal owners learn about and find Board-certified veterinary specialists, get information about animal diseases, conditions and treatment and communicate with primary care veterinarians about the specialty veterinary medicine options for their animals.

Greenwood Village, Colorado (September 7, 2021) – The American College of Veterinary Internal Medicine (ACVIM) have redeveloped the VetSpecialists.com website. The website provides animal owners and primary care veterinarians access to thousands of cardiology, large animal internal medicine, neurology, oncology and small animal internal medicine veterinary specialists and aims to raise awareness about specialty medicine options in the veterinary field. The relaunched website includes robust resource content about animal conditions and treatments, collection of success stories as told by animal owners and a search tool to find veterinary specialists.

“We are very excited about the relaunch of VetSpecialists.com. ACVIM's staff and volunteers have worked diligently to update the quality and experience of the site for all its visitors. The primary objective for this newly updated website is to be the leading source of information for the animal owning public as it pertains to diseases of their pets, farm animals and/or horses,” said Bill Tyrrell, DVM, DACVIM (Cardiology), VetSpecialists.com Subcommittee Co-Chair.

The Triad of Care is the relationship between the animal owner, the primary care veterinarian and the Board-certified veterinary specialist. With shared trust and clear communication, the three can make informed decisions about the best outcome for the animal's health as a team.

“Additionally, the website provides animal owners and pet parents the ability to quickly find high-level, advanced veterinary specialty medicine care in their geographic region,” added Zachary Wright, DVM, DACVIM (Oncology), VetSpecialists.com Subcommittee Co-Chair.

As part of the website redevelopment comes a collection of new and updated animal health pieces. These are written by veterinary specialists and are designed to address common conditions, treatments and frequently asked questions. New content is added regularly to keep abreast of the most cutting-edge information.

“The articles on VetSpecialists.com are authored by Board-certified veterinary specialists and are consistently revised to account for the latest knowledge available, making them a valuable resource for animal owners searching for information on their pet's condition. We look forward to continuing to build our Animal Health Articles collection with new articles from ACVIM Diplomates,” Christine Swanson, DVM, DACVIM (Oncology), VetSpecialists.com Subcommittee Member.

VetSpecialists.com features useful tools for large and small animal owners, such as:

- A comprehensive directory of Board-certified veterinary specialists
- An article collection of small and large animal diseases, conditions, treatments and procedures
- Information about the training and credentials of Board-certified veterinary specialists
- Education about the Triad of Care and the cooperation that occurs between primary care veterinarians and Board-certified veterinary specialists
- A new VetSpecialists.com blog for content that goes beyond animal health conditions
- A robust FAQ section to help animal owners make the best decision in their animal's treatment
- A series of success stories and videos featuring animals that received life-saving treatment from veterinary specialists
